

Lebattis Solomon -

He went during the war time with Wm Strickland to enlist as a substitute. He had been well primed before the time and on entering the office (with a fig drum on his head) he proposed to enlist for colonel. They informed him that they had plenty of colonels. Then he saw a man in the office who had lost a foot. He asked how the man lost it and was told that it was taken off by a shell. "If we go to ^{war} may, maybe we lose our foot; what good ^{money} it done us then?" And he flatly refused to enlist. But on becoming soon he imagined that he had enlisted, came out and bade an affectionate farewell to the harping crew "Good by Nis's Punch! Good by Net! Good by Maury! We rejoer man now, Mus' go war, we rejoer man." After this he left for Ludday and staid until the war was over.

At one time he had been owing father and father trusted his wages. The wages had been already assigned to John Tom Davis and there were three tractions on them already, but the others were made before the wages had
