

I have been acquainted with Dr. Barlow quite a number of years. It is my usual custom to talk with the Dr. about the condition of patients and their difficulties, more especially that class of patients under medical treatment particularly. I have done this perhaps more from a curiosity to know his method of treatment and the remedies that he was making use of in a certain class of cases under treatment.

Q. Does he evince any familiarity with the patients <sup>and a knowledge of their condition</sup> themselves, or the reverse? A. I think he does. I have always found the Dr. when treating a patient, as I considered at any rate, treating the case understandingly, and from my own stand point, correctly. That is my judgment as a medical man. I always found him using that class of remedies that I think is generally adopted by the well informed portion of the profession.

~~Q.~~ I, of course, would not wish to speak as an expert in treating the disease of insanity; but from my stand point as a medical man, and from the knowledge that I have of the treatment of nervous diseases in general, and to a
