

person lying down. This was not generally credited to George Leroy) until about ten years ago (perhaps 1908) the house next his (that is about 10 rods west of the church) was building, & when they dug the cellar they came upon the skeleton of a tall man, standing up. He had his axe, gun and kettle with him, the gun a very long old gun with a barrel fully four feet long. He believes the relics fell on Swason Francis.

At the lower lake, at the narrows at Ambages where the Ambages House used to be there was a pitched battle in which the Purists "had a scrape there" was Sam's word. defeated the Mohawks. While a hunt he would * hear of single families being killed at certain places.

George H. Hunt tells of "the last story he heard," that is, of the last fight he knew of with the Mohawks.

They came down as far as Alderton but by the Back Way. On the back side of the town they built some rafters + were not careful of their chips. The Indians at Alderton saw them & began pelting where John Coley saw him, each house on the left up on a bluff, where the highest - "must be 100 rods or so below the lake"
