

is good; all entirely satisfactory to me.
Q. Whether, if any article of food was not sufficiently supplied or was not a proper quality, you have any remedy?
A. I have.

Q. What would it be? A. To condemn it and go to the steward and treasurer.

Q. Suppose he had furnished no more or no better after that? A. Go to the trustees.

Q. That would be your last resort? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any fear to do so?
A. No, sir, not a mite.

Q. Has the officer who has occupied the place of steward for the past 10 years always obeyed you in regard to the purchase of food? A. In every respect that I have required.

Q. Purchased enough and good enough?
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you some times give instructions as to the purchase of food? A. I do.

Q. Do you do this always in a very public way so that all the employes and officers of the hospital would be likely to know it, or give it to the officer whose business it is to carry out your wish?
