

Accordingly. This furnished a greater degree of heat than was experienced there before, and as I have reason to believe, there has since that time been a record kept, which is taken, I think, through the whole building as often as once in three hours, by the watch people. The temperature is taken in the halls, but not in the rooms in any case I know of. The thermometers are hung in the halls so that they may know something about the temperature, and by hanging them at a given spot they can judge what it would be at another spot.

By Dr. Butler:

Q. Is there any method of getting at the heat of one of those large rooms?

A. Yes, you may carry in a thermometer ~~from time to time~~ and wait until it settles, and that has often been done. I have been in with different boards of trustees and I think members of the visiting committee do make examinations in that score, going with them for the purpose of holding the barometer or some thing of that kind; some times
