

he would come back. I told him that I would go on that way and see. If I didn't come back pretty soon he had better take a horse and drive out to Toques and bring me in. He said no, if I was going after him he would go too, so we started on after him as rapidly as we thought was prudent. We knew we had got quite a long pull, and we followed until we came to the end of the road and then it was heavy trawling, the ground being soft through the fields. I frequently sunk into the water and mud considerably deep. We followed him I should judge about 2 miles from the hospital when he was overtaken by Sanson. I was in sight, but my strength didn't carry me quite so far as Sanson's did. And they sat down quite a while and I sat down too. I didn't go where they were, but could see them all the time. After a while they started back, and when they came back where I was I took hold of Bangs shoulder and I think Sanson had hold of the other shoulder. I soon let go, and excepting at such times as he would stop and argue with us about going in, I didn't
